Steinhusid is the first concrete built house in the village Holmavik in the West Fjords of Iceland. It was built in 1911 and has now been restored, close to its old state, as a jewel in this small fishing village in the remote Strandir region. The house has three apartments with separate entrances. The main building is a beautiful and homy guesthouse with a nice ocean view. The two smaller apartments are fully equipped two rooms apartments with a made up double bed. All the apartments have modern convenience as TV and a free wireless internet connection. The house is divided into the main structure built in 1911 and an add-on built in 1928. The main building, which is the guesthouse, has five bedrooms, a small rest room and a large balcony on the upper floor. Two large living rooms, a spacious bathroom and a fully equipped kitchen on the lower floor. The add-on building has two cozy two rooms apartments with a good cooking facility. The upper one has also a double bed and a shower. The lower one, which is in the basement, has a double bed and a crib, a bathtub and a comfortable sofa bed in the living room. Steinhusid is a part of the old town in Holmavik. Its closest neighbors are the Museum of Icelandic Sorcery & Witchcraft and its coffeehouse Kaffi Galdur, Caf  Riis the local restaurant and bar and Hafthor's Workshop. The main building is also possible to rent as five bedrooms apartment for a big family or a group of friends. The two smaller apartments are just perfect for couples who'd like to stay in a comfortable and
